LEVERETT STUDENT PLACED UNDER HOUSE ARREST

After failing to walk his bike through Harvard Yard on numerous occasions, the Ad Board recently placed Leverett student Butch McCassidy under House arrest. Butch was gracious enough to give us an interview about his experiences.

Q: So, walk us through: how did your House arrest begin?
A: Well, they gave me this ankle bracelet to wear, and if I leave Leverett then I’ll be detained by HUPD. Not worth experimenting with.

Q: Has your House arrest affected your studies?
A: I use recordings for all my classes, so schoolwork hasn’t been a problem. Who goes to class these days anyway? What is it, 2013?

Q: Did you miss going to the grocery store for food? Or the convenience store for other essentials?
A: No, I’ve adjusted my whole diet around HUDS. I hit all the food groups: fruits, vegetables, grains, dairy and swai. As for things like toothpaste, shampoo… my roommates keep theirs in the bathroom, so no one’s going to notice if I borrow some here and there.

Q: And by, “here and there,” you mean on a daily basis, correct?
A: Essentially. But I’ve been doing that since before House arrest.

Q: Has this affected your relationships with other people?
A: Nope. I’ve centered my whole friend group around Lev people, so my House arrest really hasn’t caused too many problems.

Q: Do you ever go outside?
A: Of course! Whenever it’s nice out, I’ll have a seat in McKinlock courtyard and catch up on work. With a full view of the Charles River, I’m not actually that far from civilization.

Q: Last question, when exactly does your House arrest end?
A: Not sure, but I’m actually starting to enjoy this lifestyle. I think I’ll keep this up until Finals regardless.
SENIORS CONFUSED BY INCREASINGLY ESOTERIC SENIOR NIGHT EVENTS

As Commencement approaches, Harvard’s seniors are being honored by the organization of a number of “senior night” events. These events give members of Harvard’s Class of 2015 a chance to socialize with each other and experience the joys of Cambridge and Boston without having to interact with the more youthful members of Harvard society. However, some seniors have expressed confusion with some of the more bizarre senior night options.

“I really like the senior bars,” said Frank Jefferson ’15, “But Senior Speed Friending is kind of weird. I mean, why would I want to make new friends now? I’ll never see most of these people again.”

Francine Johnson ’15 agreed that some of the senior nights don’t make much sense. “Someone invited me to the ‘Senior Seder at Hillel’ on Facebook,” she said while polishing her class ring. “I’m not Jewish, so I wouldn’t really know what to do with myself there.”

Jefferson ’15 had more complaints. “I signed up for the Senior Night Trip to Framingham because I thought they had something cool planned,” he said, “But we all took a bus to Framingham and just walked around for hours. They gave everyone on the trip a tennis ball and told us to ‘play games.’ The leader of the trip admitted to me that he’d never been there before. What the heck?”

Johnson ’15 had an even more harrowing tale. “I went to the Senior Drum Circle because my friend asked me to, but when I got there, it was like five people holding hands in the MAC quad and singing Gregorian chants. We tried to join them, but they refused to open up the circle. They started to sing the chants louder and made angry eye contact with us every time we approached, so we just left. To be honest, it was a terrible way to spend a Tuesday night.”

Upon hearing this interview, another member of the Class of 2015 chimed in. “I went to one event in Quincy basement that was just advertised as ‘Senior Party,’” said Joe Lim ’15, “But when I walked into the room, it was totally empty. The door swung shut and locked behind me. I had to stay there until the next morning, when a custodian let me out.”

At press time, Natalie Portman had just announced that she was planning to use her Class Day speech as a testing ground for new yodeling techniques.

Mystery Movie Quote:

Last Week’s Answer:

Riddle:

What has one eye but cannot see?