Upcoming Movie Releases for the Holiday Season (Not Coming to a Theater Near You)

Next to the summer blockbuster season, the holiday season marks the biggest time of year for Hollywood films. What interesting films almost made it to theaters this winter?

Inception Remake - To capitalize on a growing trend of 2010s nostalgia, Warner Brothers Studios moves to remake a popular film from the era, recasting Leonardo DiCaprio, Joseph Gordon-Levitt, and Ellen Page’s roles as Nicolas Cage, Jaden Smith, and Kristen Stewart to appeal to modern youth audiences.

Enders Game - In an effort to capitalize on the movies while they’re in the public eye, the studio rushed production on movies for the rest of the series. Expect monthly releases for the next year.

Squirrel Girl - After seeing the Iron Man series take off, Marvel decides to follow the formula and cast an actor with personal issues as a lesser-known super hero. The end result is Lindsay Lohan as Squirrel Girl.

In a poorly-planned copycat move, DC announces Wonder Woman film starring Amanda Bynes for a summer release.

And last but not least, a partial list of sequels:

The year’s unexpected hit, Gravity, has it’s sequel announced: Gravity 2: Fall Harder.

Realizing three movies might not be enough to retell one book, The Hobbit 1.5 is released to lead into (what was going to be) the second movie.

Proving nobody learned from the first time and that every film is getting a sequel regardless of necessity, The Matrix Rebooted is announced.

Mystery Movie Quote

“I am Vinz, Vinz Clortho, Keymaster of Gozer. Volguus Zildrohar, Lord of the Sebouillia. Are you the Gatekeeper?”

Last Week’s Quote was from Billy Madison

[“I award you no points, and may God have mercy on your soul.”]

You have three rooms: One filled with Harvard students, one filled with Yale students, and one with a mix of both. Each of the rooms has a label on the door, but none of the labels is on the correct door. The Harvard and Yale are indistinguishable by appearance— they even smell the same. The only way to distinguish them is by talking to them. You can ask only one student from one room which school he or she is from, and then you must assign all the room labels.

How do you get the labels right?

BRAIN TEASER

We all know that Harvard Yale is a time for fun, school spirit, and a little healthy rivalry. Although Yale’s football team lately has been about as threatening as Sunday brunch, you should still remember that what Yale itself lacks in ferocity (and prestige, academics, attractiveness, popularity, etc.), New Haven more than makes up for in sketchiness. With that in mind, here’s a few tips to ensure you have a safe, pleasant time at this year’s Harvard-Yale Game.

1) As always, use the buddy system. Although the fact that you actually have a friend will make it clear that you don’t actually go to Yale, it’s still always safest not to travel alone.
2) Whatever you do, DO NOT do laundry while at Yale. You know why. Don’t make me say it.
3) If you feel extremely threatened, denounce Harvard, say that you only go here because you couldn’t get into Yale. It’s obviously untrue, but fear not; the ensuing ego boost that your claim will cause is the perfect distraction for your escape.
4) Refrain from wandering off campus. New Haven’s crime rate is inversely proportionally to their football team’s success against Harvard. Let that be warning enough.
5) Wearing a bulldog collar may ingratiate you with the Yalies— consider bringing one long for sticky situations.
6) For goodness’ sake, seriously, please don’t go near the laundry rooms. Nobody needs that.

*Is it still called a “game” when everyone knows who’s going to win? Isn’t it more like a ceremony or a ritual or something at this point?
