Hasselhoff Claims He Had Hand in Berlin Wall Falling
David Hasselhoff has complained to museum curators after finding his photo absent in a collection of memorabilia about the fall of the Berlin Wall. The actor and producer, who says he is working on a film version of TV series Knight Rider, claims he is partly responsible for the fall of the concrete divide. Speaking to German magazine TV Spielfilm, Hasselhoff said in 1989, the year the wall fell, he had helped reunite the country by singing his song ‘Looking for Freedom’ among millions of German fans at the Brandenburg Gate in Berlin. He said he felt he had moved people on both sides of the wall, although he admitted hardly any of the East Germans could speak English. He said: ‘I find it a bit sad that there is no photo of me hanging on the walls in the Berlin Museum at Check-Point Charlie. ‘After my appearance I hacked away at pieces of the wall that had the black, red and yellow colours of the German flag on it. I kept the big piece for myself and gave the smaller pieces to colleagues at Baywatch.’ Hasselhoff said he really didn’t mind that Americans make fun of his popularity in Germany and says he feels it is his second homeland. He said: ‘Many Americans joke about my popularity in Germany. But they have no idea how beautiful Europe is and how rich it is in culture and fun and warmth and children. In Germany children have brought me thousands of flowers.’

San Fran Set for Feng-Shui Law
A San Francisco politician has proposed a new law which would mean planners have to consider a building’s energy flows. The 4,000-year-old Chinese art of feng-shui claims to channel positive energy, known as chi, leaving the building’s occupier in a state of harmony. Buildings, and the objects within them must, be positioned correctly to channel the energy properly. Leland Y Yee’s proposal would mean that the California Building Standards Commission would have to adopt standards that would aid feng shui. The motion must pass the committee stage before progressing to the full Assembly for approval. ‘The structure of a building can affect a person’s mood which can influence a person’s behaviour, which, in turn, can determine the success of a person’s personal and professional relationships,’ the proposal states. ‘The concept of feng shui is a simple one - to improve your life by improving your relationship to the environment around you,’ said Mr Yee, who is also a child psychologist. ‘Feng shui is an earth science that examines mathematics, physics, geology, astronomy, and architecture, among other sciences.’ Mr Yee, who left China at the age of three, added: ‘It employs the concepts of balance and harmony, and incorporates natural elements to enhance health, wellbeing and prosperity.’

Michael Jackson Lookalikes Fear Ruin

Michael Jackson lookalikes in America fear they are going to be ruined because of the child sex allegations against the pop star. The singer has pleaded not guilty to the charges, but lookalikes say their bookings have slumped since the star was arrested and charged last year. Las Vegas-based entertainer, Kenny Wizz, told ABC News: "I'm concerned, simply because I love what I do. I worry that I won't be accepted in the same way. I'm a professional. I, like, do the moonwalk, all the old stuff." Other impersonators said long-standing bookings were cancelled in the wake of Jackson's arrest. They said most of the calls now come from satire shows wanting to spoof the singer. Lookalike Jody Rogers said: "When I asked them what it was about, they hemmed and hawed, beat around the bush, and I turned them down. My career aside, I just don't want to do that to Michael, from one human being to another." Rob Garrett, founder of lookalikes company RHRN, said: 'There are guys waiting by the phone, and it's not ringing. They're concerned.'
