Want to spend your time somewhere other than cold, blustery Cambridge? Worried about the global economic downturn? Then apply for the "best job in the world.”

In an attempt to offset the 5.1% decrease in tourism to Australia as a result of the recession, Australian authorities are offering a “dream job,” to one worth applicant. With a salary of $106,000 for six month of work, the job entails living on the exclusive Hamilton Island and blogging about it. Addition responsibilities include cleaning the pool, which has an automatic filter and feeding the reef’s fish, “which have managed on their own up until now.” The Island Caretaker will be lodged in Blue Pearl, a half-million dollar, three-bedroom house on the island, with a state-of-the-art entertainment system, private plunge pool and spa and "the traditional Aussie barbecue”.

Yet, as of Jan 13, over 210 applications had already been received for the job and islandreejob.com, run by Tourism Queensland, was visited by more than 160,000 visitors in its first 24 hours. The overload of visits led to an initial website crash, but a spokeswoman for Tourism Queensland noted that it was up and running now, though it was expected to "go a bit crazy" the first day when the Americans woke up to the offer of being paid to live in paradise.

The application process is open until Feb 22nd, whereupon 11 shortlist candidates will be flown to the island in May for a final selection process. Applicants are considered on their merits, and must be over 18. No previous tourism experience is required, simply a 60-second video. The six-month job officially begins July 1.
