Family Sick of Living on Butt Hole Road
A South Yorkshire family have moved home because they are fed up with their address - Butt Hole Road. Paul and Lisa Allot, who lived in the £150,000 bungalow with their two children for 15 months, got sick of people pulling their leg. They say people posed for pictures outside their house in Conisbrough, many of them with their trousers dropped, reports The Sun. And pizza deliverymen and taxi drivers refused to call at their home thinking the address was a joke. Paul, 30, a lighting installer, said: “I like a laugh but it was beyond a joke. We’ve had people steal the street sign and it got to the point where I dreaded reciting our address. I thought it would be nice to rename it Button Hole Road. But it’s easier to move than go through all the hassle of a new name with the local council.” However, new owner Peter Sutton says he’s happy to live on Butt Hole Road. “I think it’ll be fun and I know what to expect.”

Man Jailed For Snakes in Pants

A Swedish tourist who tried to smuggle eight baby snakes, four of which were venomous king cobras, into Australia in his trousers has been jailed for two months. Per Johan Adolfssson, 28, was sentenced in Sydney’s Central Local Court for importing an endangered species and making a false and misleading statement. Adolfssson was searched by customs officers at Sydney Airport on September 22, after arriving from Bangkok on a Thai Airways flight. They found four venomous baby king cobras and four baby emerald tree boa strapped to his legs in homemade pouches. The cobras had died during the nine-hour flight, but the boa survived. Adolfssson’s lawyer, Michael Pridisid, said his client had bought the snakes for US$1000 from a professional breeder. It was not clear whether the snakes were bought in Thailand or Sweden. “It was a very haphazard, small-scale, and amateurish operation,” said Pridisid. “He is not part of a smuggling ring,” Pridisid said Adolfssson, a glass worker and window fitter, had been suffering depression and alcohol abuse following an injury at work in Sweden. He had planned to sell the snakes in Australia for US$500 to fund an eight-day holiday and lift his spirits. “It is a bizarre way to have a holiday,” Pridisid told the court.

Aide Apologizes After Urinating While Drunk on Philippine Leader’s Jet

A top Philippine civil servant has apologized for urinating in the cabin of the president’s jet. Press undersecretary Heraclio “Rocky” Nazarano relieved himself near an emergency exit, reports the Philippine Star. He said he was drunk and had thought he was in one of the toilets on President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo’s chartered jet. President Arroyo was on the plane which was on route to Manila from a visit to Paris. “I deeply apologize about all the shattered expectations,” he said. “How I wish I could deny it. But it was one moment of weakness I’m really sorry about. The problem is the situation went beyond everybody’s control,” he added.

Shuttleboy 3.1

Wish there were a quick and easy way on fas to find out the next few shuttles leaving the River, Quad, Yard, or any other location on campus? Shuttleboy 3.1 is the latest version of a UNIX program accessible on fas.harvard.edu (and ice and nice) that allows you to check quickly the schedules of Harvard University shuttles. Not only does Shuttleboy allow you to view the full schedule of shuttles between specific origins and destinations, it also allows for customization, so that you can save time looking up your favorite routes’ schedules.

To try it, log into fas.harvard.edu and type exactly the following at the fas% prompt:
```
~malan/pub/bin/sb3setup
```

Then, hit Enter or Return and log out. Whenever you log in thereafter, you can run Shuttleboy simply by running `sb` at the fas% prompt!
